She was awakened from a sound sleep by clouds of suffocating smoke filling her cabin. At almost the same time, someone banged and hammered at her cabin door, shouting something quite unintelligible.

The sudden awakening confused her and the dense smoke in the cabin made it difficult for her to find the door. She choked and gasped for breath, groping frantically for the door knob. Just in time, she felt and saw a porthole. She crawled through it and dropped to the deck outside.

There was no apparent panic. The captain was calmly giving out orders for the safe evacuation of the passengers. He handled the situation well. The crew was making frantic efforts to launch the lifeboats. All the time, the flames were creeping nearer.

Suddenly, someone gave her a violent push. She stumbled and fell into a lifeboat. There was difficulty in getting it moving. After what seemed like an eternity, they were pulling away from the ship. By that time, the front of the ship was a pillar of flames.

Kathy had looked forward to the cruise, a time to relax and recharge her store of energy. It was the first time that she was on a holiday alone. Her family members and friends usually go with her. But this time they were unable to obtain leave from their jobs. She remembered their farewell kisses as they bid her goodbye at Collyer Quay where she had boarded the passenger liner. She had been greatly impressed. The ship was a beauty to behold! There were many facilities to keep holiday-makers entertained and actively occupied. The swimming pool, the gymnasium, the billiard and other games rooms as well as the theatre on board were very well managed. Activities were drawn up for the next three days.
