Foreword

Textbooks placed in your hands today are undoubtedly a powerful learning resource that supports the teaching and learning process. The Educational Publications Department has long been engaged in the national mission of providing free textbooks, ensuring equal educational opportunities for all. I remind you that it is the responsibility of the children of this nation to make proper use of these textbooks, which are provided by the government through a significant financial investment.

A textbook is not merely a bundle of paper filled with letters and images; it is a precious treasure that provides the guidance needed to face the challenges of life. The many lessons contained within these books will lead you on the path to achieving your dreams. What you learn through these textbooks today will not only help you conquer the world tomorrow but will also become golden memories in your life one day.

At the same time, your journey must not be confined only to textbooks. The challenge before you is to seek the ever-expanding knowledge of the modern world each day.

Dear children, may you cultivate wisdom along with good character, and contribute to a better world. I extend my heartfelt gratitude to everyone who worked with dedication to ensure these high-quality textbooks reached your hands.
